

ABSTRACT

Method and system for hedging the risk of correlation between a set of macro-economic variables, wherein at least one contract is built for a given duration and for at least two underlying variables selecting from said set, the payoff of the contract increasing with the correlation between the two variables and being lowly sensitive to the volatility level of the two variables.